NIKOLAI KAPUSTIN
5 Études in Different Intervals, 1992 (16')

63 minutes in total

The six Études by the South-Korean composer, Unsuk Chin, form the centrepiece of this disc. Arguably the most important works to be written for the piano in recent years, these are natural successors to the piano études by György Ligeti and are already of international prominence. With their scintillating textures and inventive use of timbre, they are entirely absorbing and electrifying works which are sure to become a keystone of the piano repertoire.

These have been combined with a variety of études from either end of the twentieth century. Those by Lyapunov are in a late-Romantic, Lisztian mould with descriptive titles and compelling narratives. Szymanowski's Op. 33 were written less than 20 years after Lyapunov's yet, with their mercurial timbre and fleet textures, inhabit an entirely different soundworld.

The programme ends with 5 Études in Different Intervals by Nikolai Kapustin. Each étude is structured around specific intervals yet, despite this rather rigid concept, they are in a free-formed jazzy style and provide an exuberant finale.

BUDGET

Clare is currently in discussion with various record companies about the possibility of distributing the CD under their label. The recording industry has been particularly badly hit by the recent financial crisis and most labels now require an artist to present them with a master recording which they then print and distribute.

The cost of producing a master recording of piano music is approximately £10,000, comprising:
£3,000 to hire a concert hall, grand piano and to pay a piano tuner for a three-day session.
£4,500 to pay a sound engineer, editor and producer to record and master a disc.
£250 for a cover image.
Up to £2,500 to hire a PR specialist to publicise the disc.

While most record labels would try to get a disc reviewed in the musical press, a PR specialist is necessary in order to coordinate a more substantial campaign for maximum impact. The specialist would work to secure reviews as well as feature articles in music magazines and the national press. Chasing radio and television interviews would be a priority and they would ensure that the concert tour was well integrated both with the CD release and the publicity surrounding it. Competition is now so fierce that even a high quality recording can sink without a trace if it is not adequately publicised so good PR absolutely essential.
